Beneath a beautiful Baobab tree on the family game farm in Musina, a bottle of champagne on ice is discreetly hidden, with the 'groom to be' down on one knee supposedly looking for leopard tracks, was the perfect setting for Pierré's proposal to Adél – who was suitably surprised but, of course, said YES. Despite having met Pierré at a party at a friend's house some seven years before it was only after a three-year, long distance, relationship that Adél moved to Pretoria and then another four years before the Happy Day.

One of the many highlights of the actual day were the photographs taken in the veldt beforehand, which included the arrival of unexpected but very welcome guests, namely a warthog and rhino who joined the photo shoot.

Adél jazzed up a pair of her old shoes for the 'something old', the 'the something new' was her jewellery and she sported a blue ribbon on her petticoat.

The couple recalled that the ceremony was special and included a beautiful message. An exceptional party followed afterwards. Their entrance to the Reception itself was by way of the new husband and wife performing their wedding dance.

Adél says "We also forgot to cut our wedding cake during the formalities and only did so after midnight with all our friends helping us. A moment we will never forget!"

A word of advice from the happy bride is "Have your photographs taken beforehand so that the wedding can flow without breaking for photographs before the Reception. It also helps you and your groom to relax and spend some time together alone".

A honeymoon in Spain was the perfect ending to a fairytale wedding.
